WEB1 – Cyber Security in a Remote Working Environment

2 March 2021

OVERVIEW

In the wake of the COVID-19 crisis, much of the workforce has opted to working remotely, with many workers operating out of makeshift “offices” they created in their homes with little or no warning. This unexpected and abrupt move in these workforces, without much training on preventative cyber-hack measures, can thus expose individuals and organizations to various cyber threats that would hamper services and expose / destroy vital data. Cyber criminals are continuously looking to exploit the weakest link within IT infrastructures to exploit data and information held by organizations. The viability with Internet of Things (IoT) and the Dark Web has given the upper hand to cyber criminals in its route from strategic exploitation to monetization.

The session aims to address the need for cybersecurity and its objective towards ensuring confidentiality, integrity and availability of vital data and services. The facilitator will discuss the anatomy of cyber-attacks and current threat vectors which both individuals and organizations would need to take into consideration when setting up controls and threat detection mechanisms. Following that would be an outline of tips for individuals and organizations to cope with the change that comes with remote arrangements.
